

Now That I Know: Previewing as Pre-reading

When reading non-fiction, it is extremely important to preview the text. If you preview a text before reading, you are more likely to make connections to and remember what you read. Use the text features in When Elephants Fight to discover facts, make predictions, and generate questions before reading.

P: Predict: Look at the cover. Make some predictions about the book based on what you see here.

R: Review the Table of Contents: Review the 5 chapters listed in the Contents. List the chapter titles below.

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____
4. _____
5. _____

From your review of the chapter titles, make three predictions about what we will learn from this book and how this story might be told.

E: Examine the Visuals: There are a lot of photographs, diagrams, illustrations, and art work. Write three fast facts you gained from examining the visuals.

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

V: Vocabulary: Vocabulary can be challenging in some nonfiction books. Skim the captions that go with the visuals. Complete the following sentence starters:

1. I think the vocabulary in this book will be _____.
2. The words seem to be related to _____.
3. I think I'll find the language in this book challenging because _____.
4. Strategies I'll use to make the vocabulary easier to read and remember are _____.

I: Index: The Index can give us a quick sense of the topics we will read about in a nonfiction book. What can you predict about the content or organization of this book based on the index?

E: Establish a Plan: Now that you have previewed this book, what plan do you have for noting and remembering the information?

W: What is Your Response? Draw an image or write a response after previewing the book. You will revisit your illustration and/or response after you read this book to add your new thoughts after reading.
